The operating principle of the 'DEMON' heater is very simple. The oil in the bowl is ignited on the surface. Air entering the bowl through the air regulator feeds this generating fire, which produces gas that rises into the stack, where the main combustion takes place. There are in fact, two fires. The size of the fire in the bowl is controlled by the amount of air allowed to enter through the air regulator, which, in turn, controls the main fire in the stack. The 'DEMON' is extinguished by closing the air regulator in the bowl and the spring loaded butterfly valve at the base of the stack.

Remember, if your staff are warm, your production is higher
